Dear Dr. Emberson,

"Quantifying hidden exploitation: Dual method prevalence estimates of labour exploitation among domestic workers in the United Kingdom"

Thank you for submitting your manuscript to IRJ which I have read with considerable interest. It is concerned to better measure and assess the nature and extent of labour exploitation among the population of domestic workers in the UK. Its central contribution, on your own assessment, is to shed new light on how quantitative methods may be used to estimate the exploitation risk of vulnerable workers entering the UK on restricted visas. As such it requires, in my judgement, specific knowledge and understanding of relatively advanced quantitative techniques that render it more suitable for a publication in economic statistics and quantitative methods rather than employment relations.

I am sorry to disappoint you on this occasion.
